About the Project:

In this project, the aim is to enhance financial services for marginalized groups in Scotland. We'll identify unmet needs and improve service provision by exploring perceptions, fears, trust, and cultural factors. Our research question is:

"What unmet needs exist within the current financial services provision in Scotland and what could be done to make these services more accessible to a pluriversal and multicultural society?"

Aim:

To optimise and smoothen the collaboration between humanitarian orgs and banks, eventually uplifting women facing domestic abuse. There's a gap in the existing system.

Gap in existing system

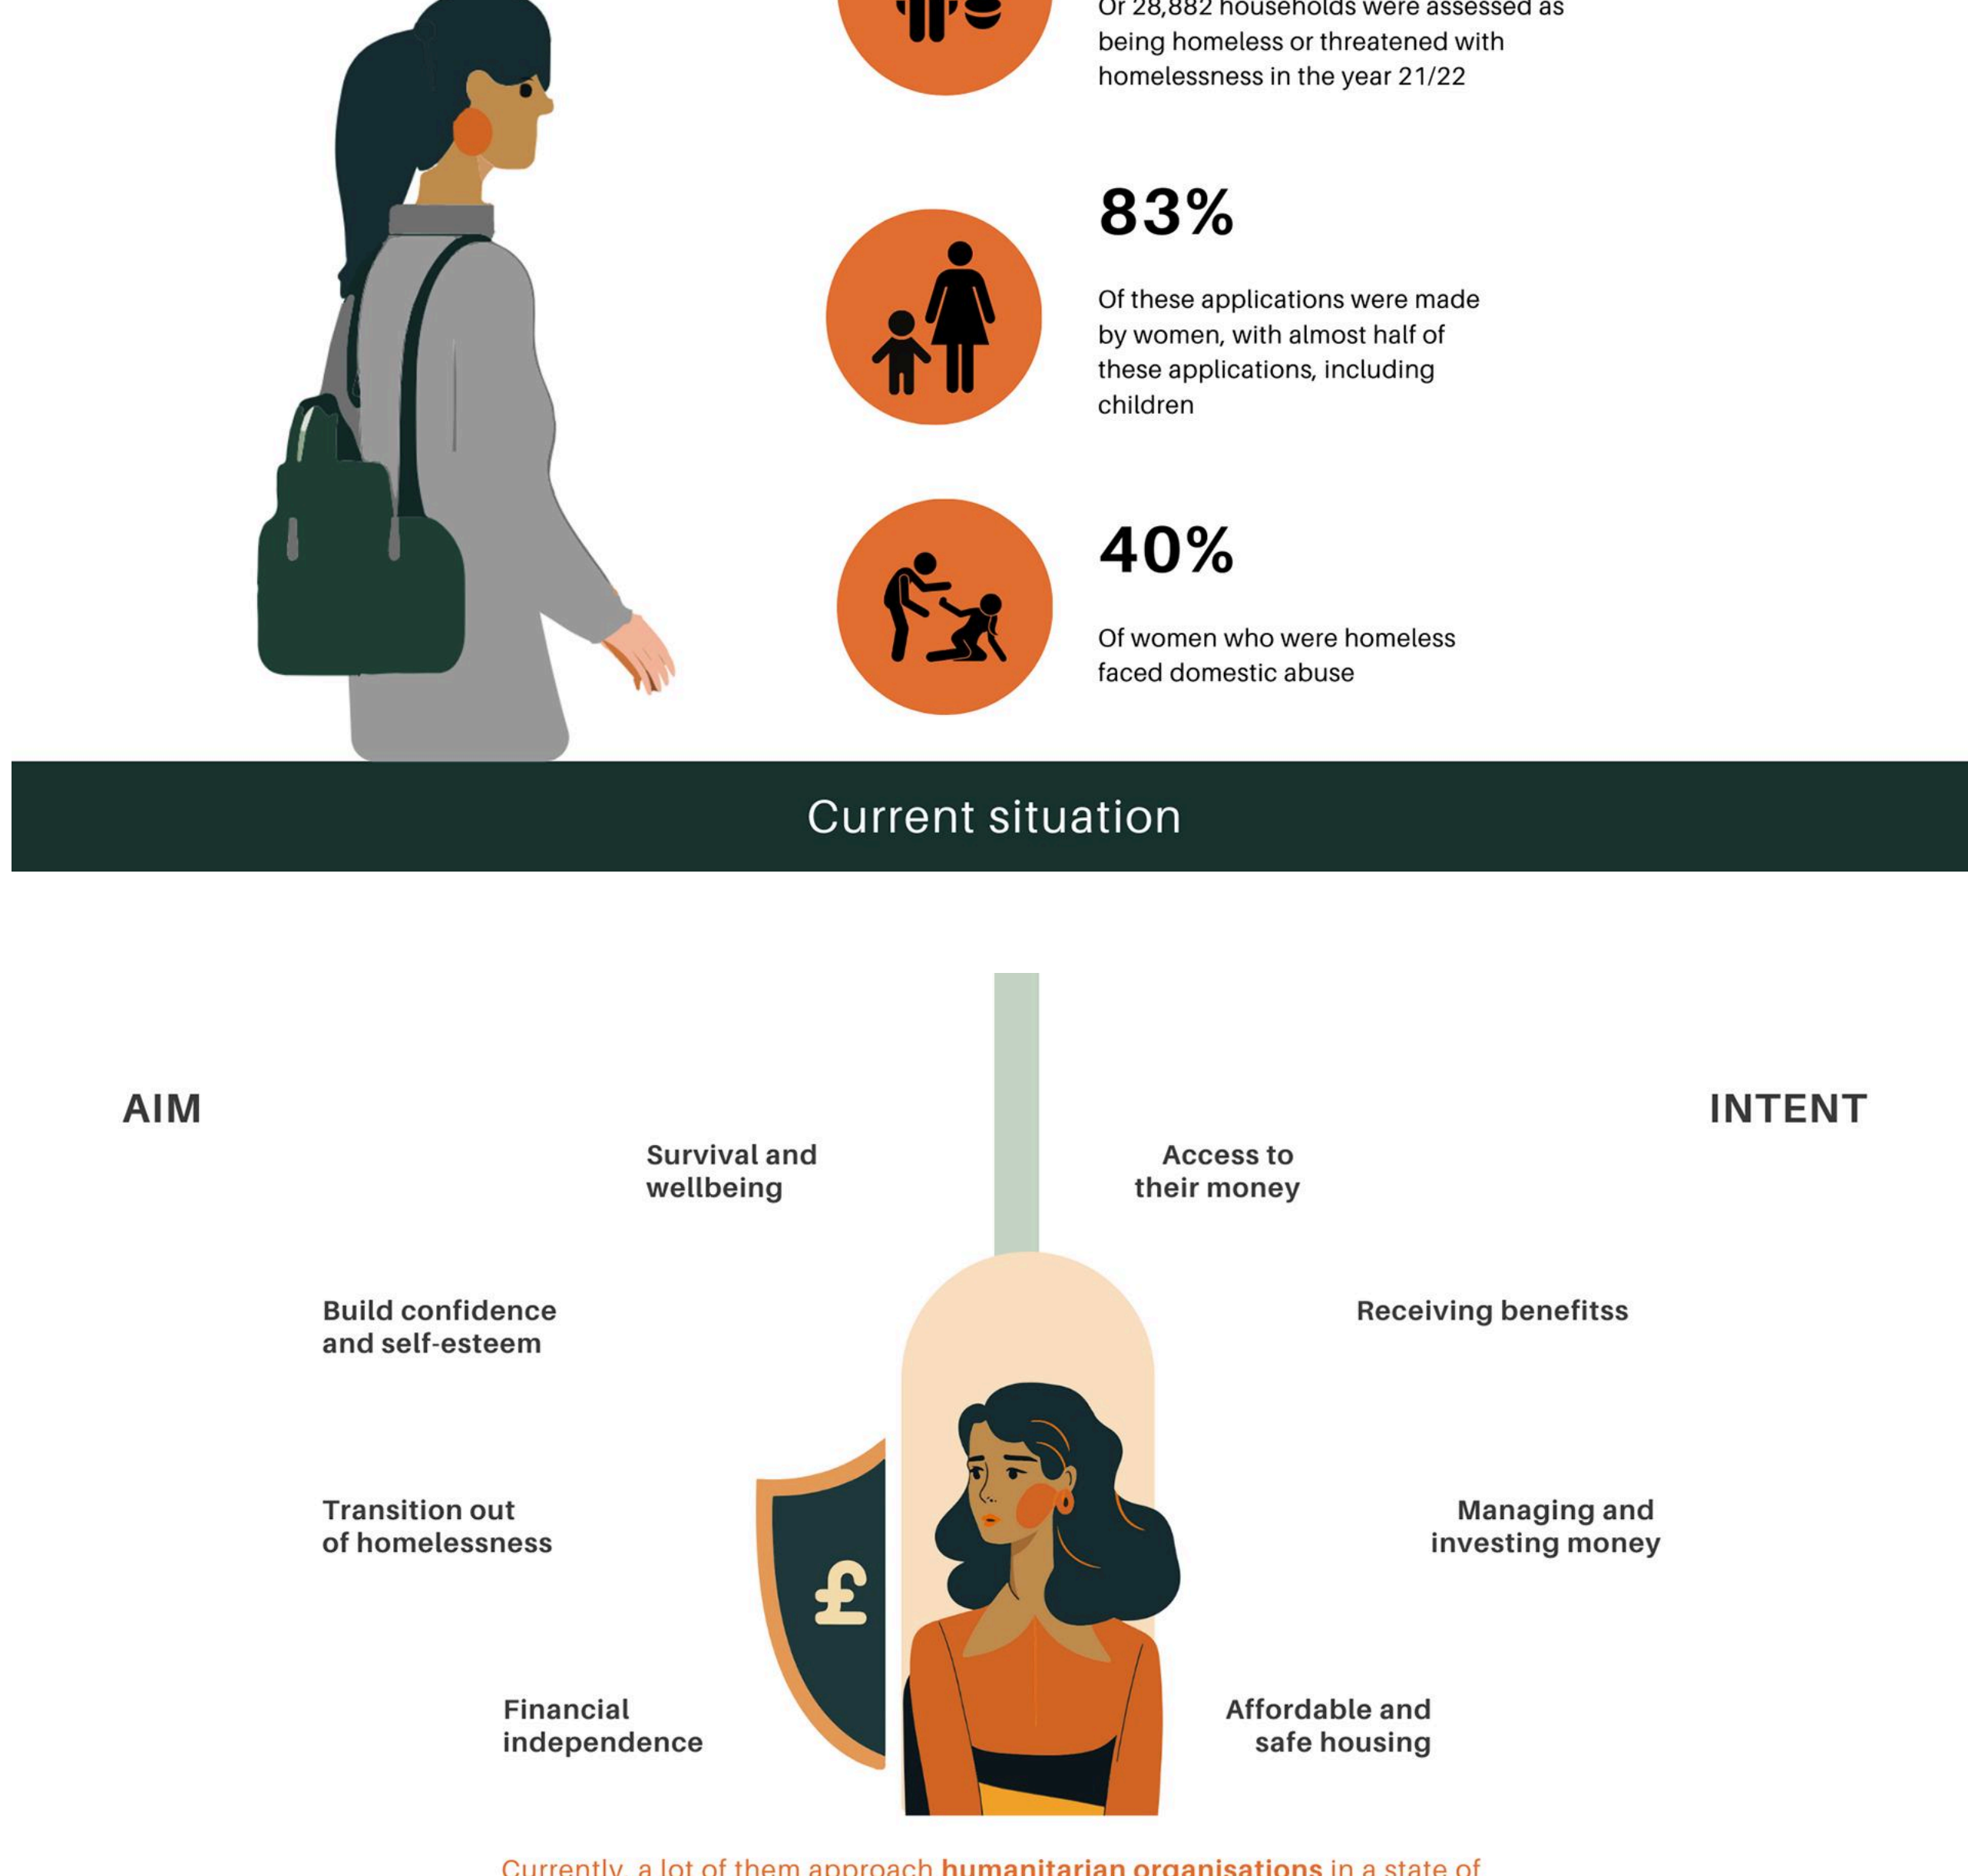

What did I do to learn more?

I was engaged with organisations offering financial services to a diverse range of people to investigate opportunities to enhance and develop the current service provision by identifying unmet needs for marginalized or unintentionally excluded groups. This provided several opportunities for research around topics including perceptions, fears, trust and culture, among others identified as the research progressed. I Designed a system called "Nexushift"; Our proposal aims to create a collaboration between non-profit organizations and Banks to help vulnerable women, especially victims of abuse, have easier access to financial services in the UK.

For whom and why? Co-Design Opportunity:

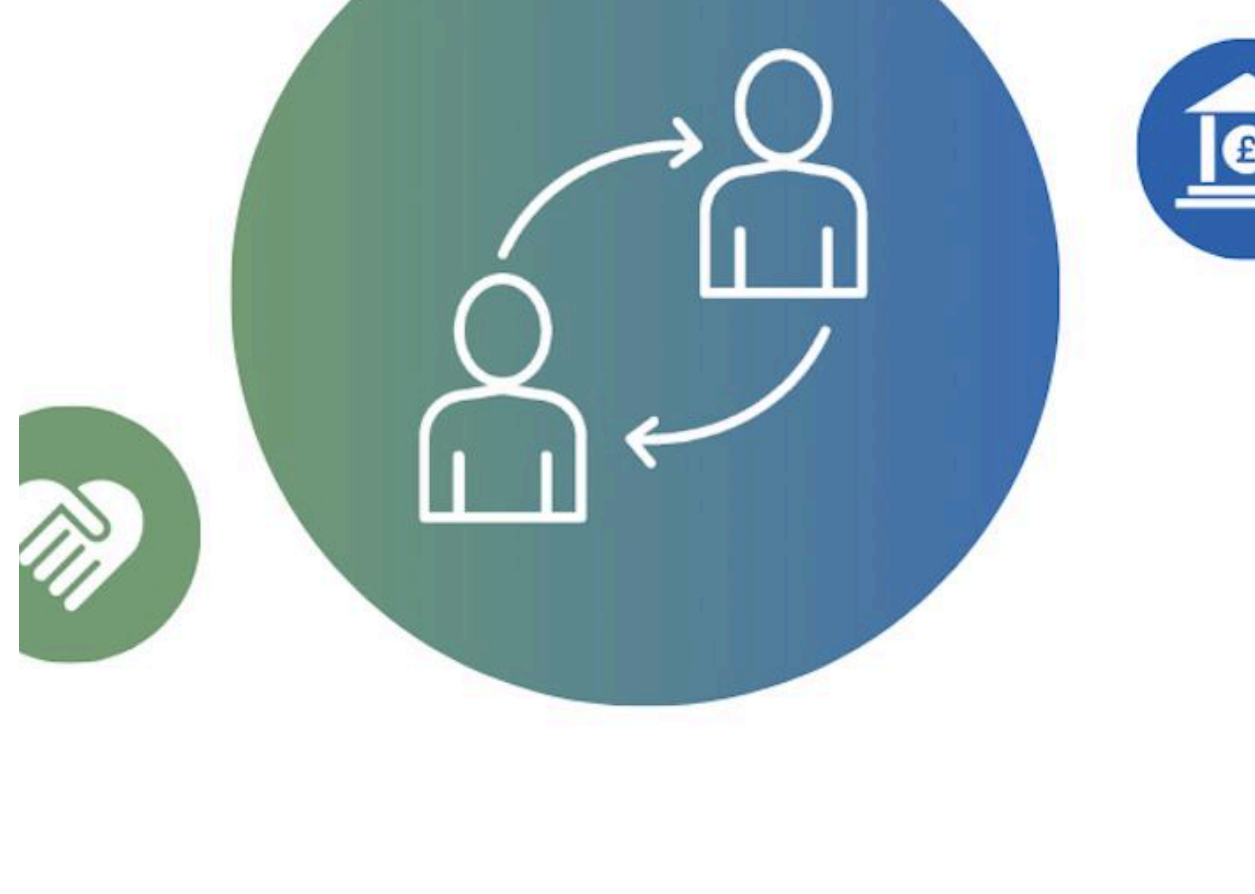

Women in distress often seek help from humanitarian organizations. In response, these organizations act as intermediaries, helping women access financial services. They also implement trauma-informed practices as an initial form of aid for the victim, referred to as the "guest" in the industry.

What is the aim behind helping women?

Proposal Statement:

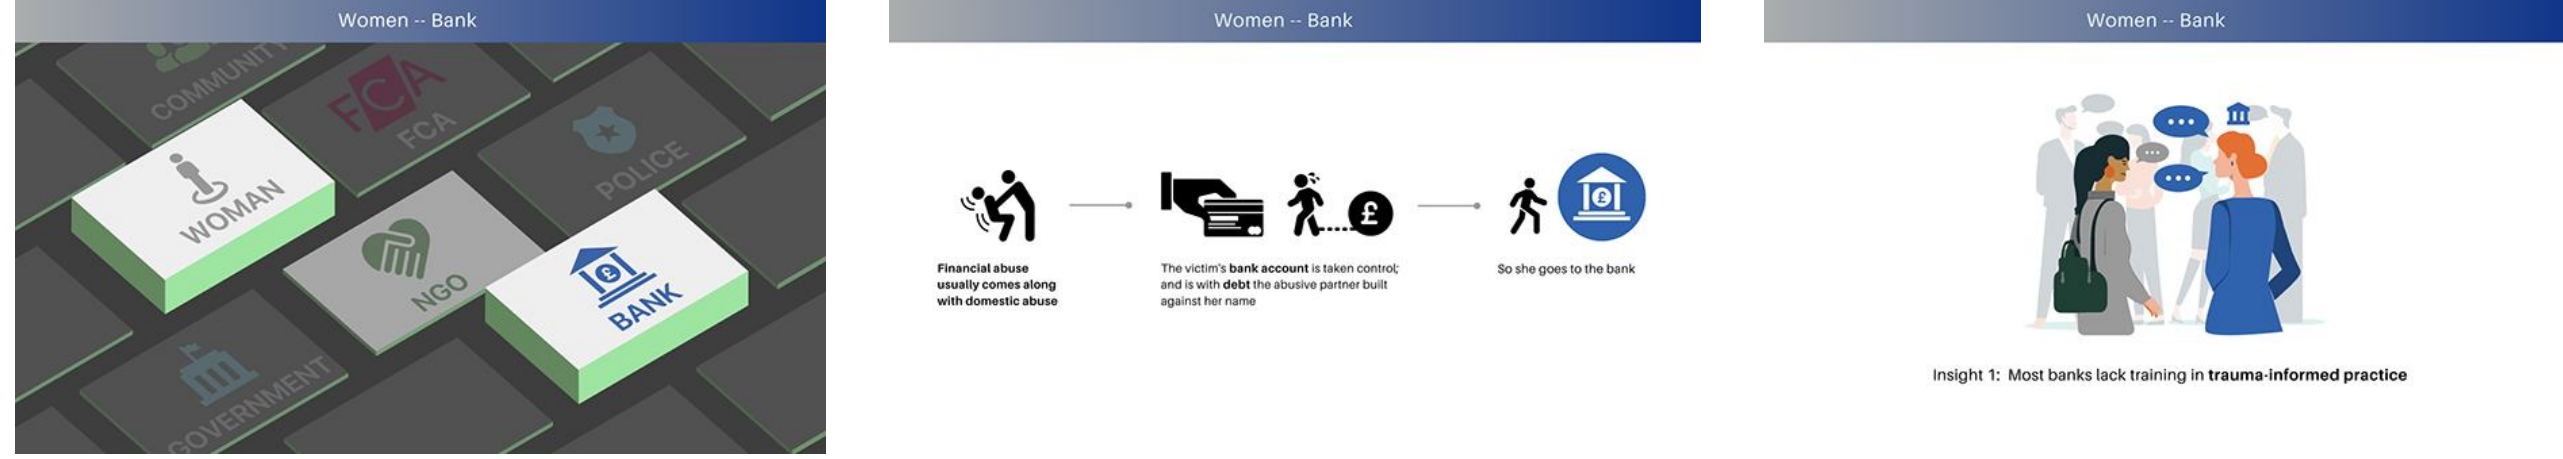

"The Proposal aims to create a collaboration between nonprofit organisations and Banks to help vulnerable women, especially victims of abuse, have easier access to financial services in the UK".

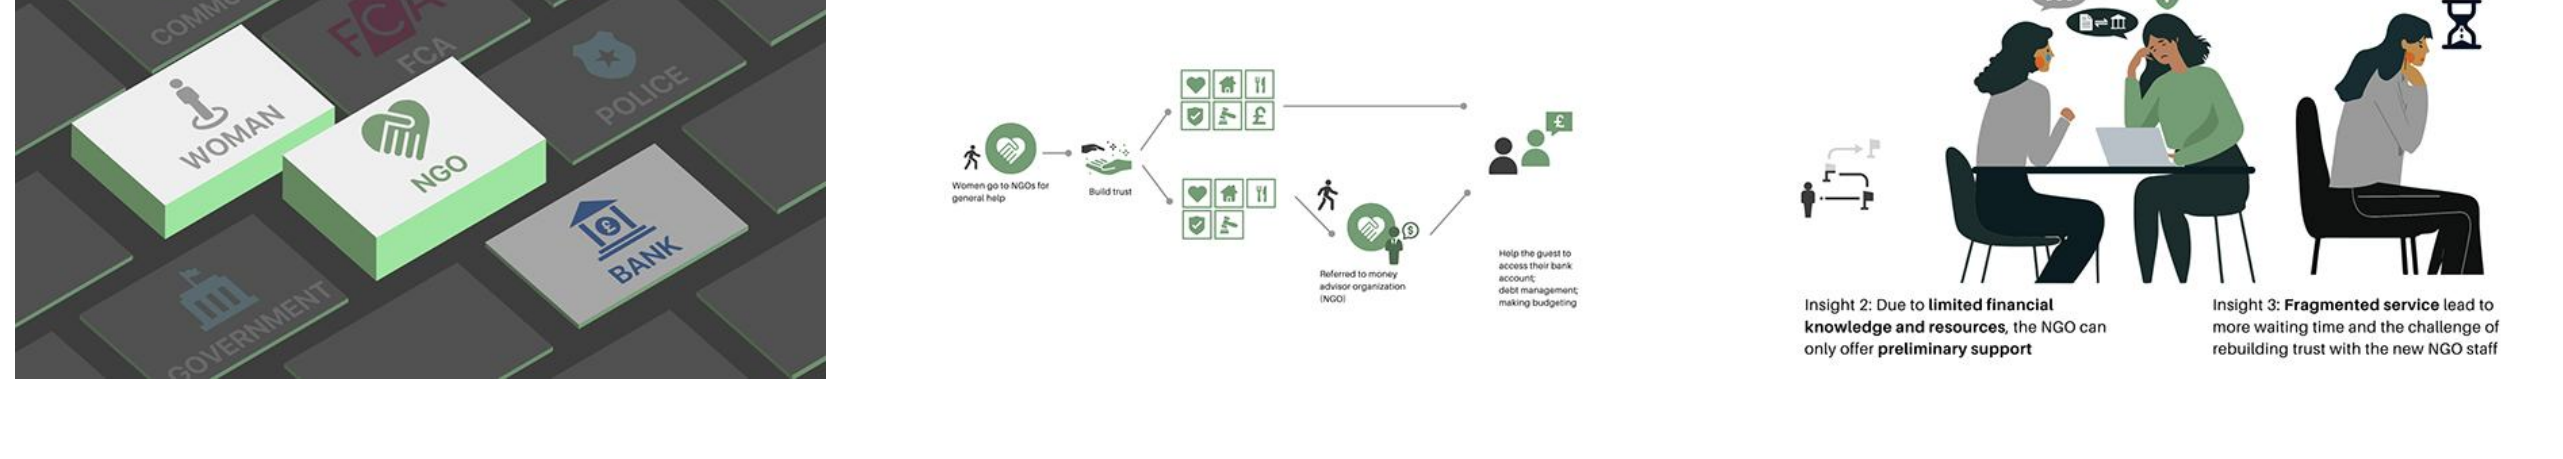

Observation:

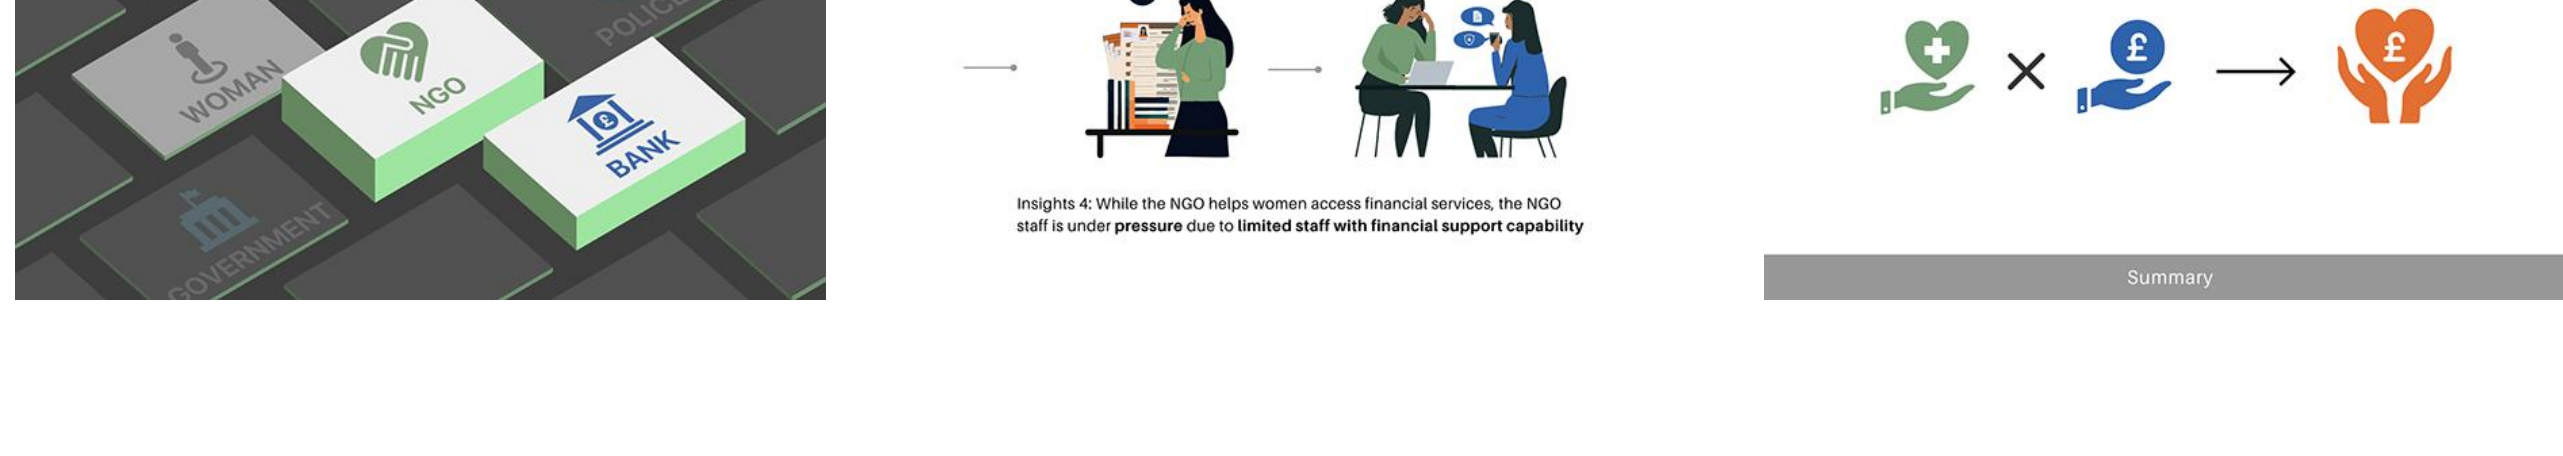

The first scenario to consider is Women X Bank

The Second scenario to consider is Women X NGO

The third scenario to consider is the NGO X Bank

How will the proposal work?
